For Your Future

The alert young women of today who are seeking a profession that is both fascinating and remunerative are turning in increasing numbers to the study of Home Economics. The Home Economics graduate may choose a career in business, research, teaching, extension work, clothing and decorating, dietetics and food service, public health and social welfare, and many other distinguished fields.

Educators and administrators realize that the home is the very core of the American way of life. Now as never before the home is the center of concentrated study by academic institutions, business concerns, advertising agencies, government, and religious organizations. Every effort is being made to improve the nation's housing, diet, and family relationships. The Home Economics expert plays an essential role in all such surveys and studies.

To the Home Economics graduate falls the task of keeping in step with the rapid strides of scientific progress and correlating such progress with the life of each individual.

The demand for such professionals is great, the opportunities unlimited. The Home Economics department of Carthage college will prepare you for a successful career in this exciting and stimulating profession. The department meets all the requirements of the Smith-Hughes Act.

Graduates of the Smith-Hughes course in approved colleges normally receive additional compensation from Federal funds. Thus, Smith-Hughes graduates frequently command higher salaries than graduates of non-approved colleges.

A beautiful new building, excellent facilities and a fine teaching staff provide you a splendid educational opportunity in which to prepare for many different kinds of exciting careers in Home Economics.
